SOUTHERN CONNECTICUT...
HURRICANE IRENE EXPECTED TO ARRIVE IN CONNECTICUT SUNDAY MORNING...
MAJOR COASTAL FLOODING POSSIBLE...
MODERATE TO MAJOR INLAND FLOODING POSSIBLE...

At 8:00 AM the center of Hurricane Irene was located at 34.7 North 76.5 West (Approximately 60 Miles Southwest of Cape Hatteras). Irene has maximum sustained winds of 85 MPH and is moving to the North Northeast at 14 MPH.

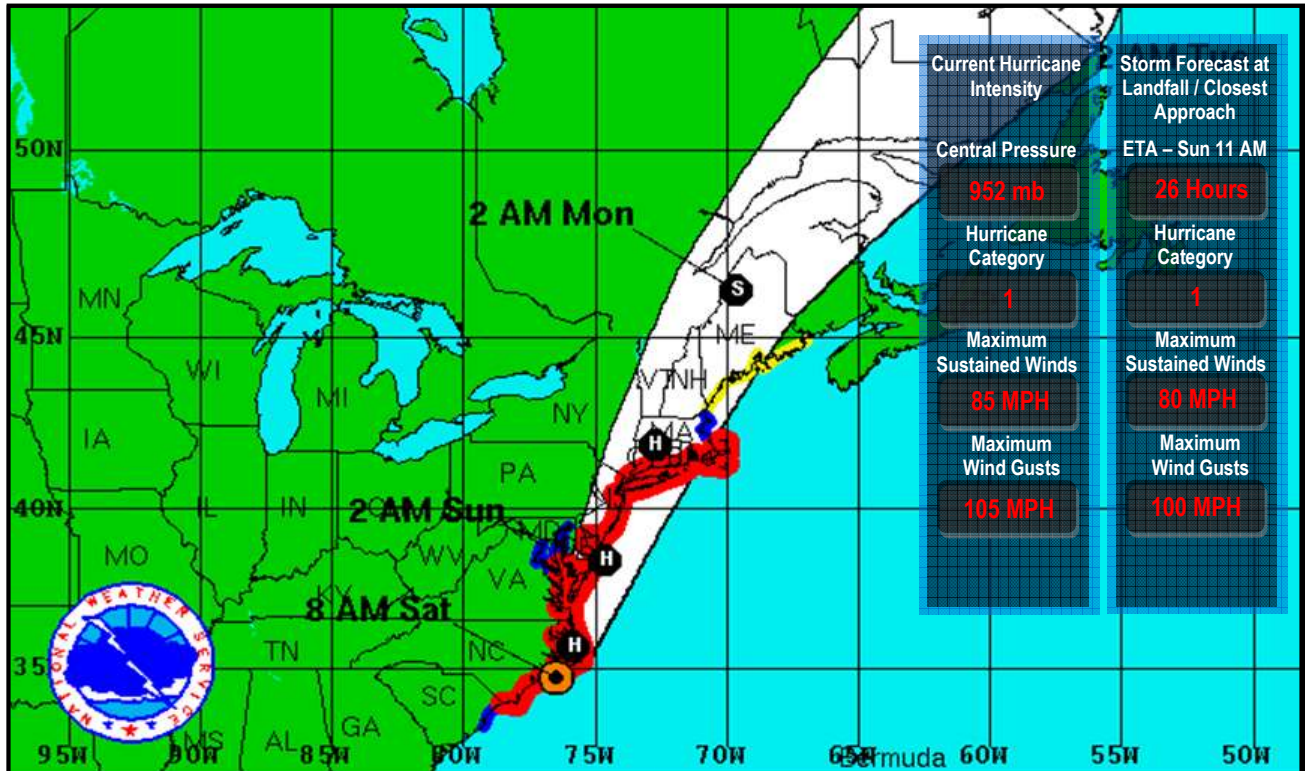

The National Hurricane Center (NHC) continues to forecast that Irene will remain a Category I hurricane today and remain a Category I hurricane as the storm moves up the East Coast tonight and into New England tomorrow morning.

Irene is forecast to move up along the New Jersey Coast early Sunday morning and make landfall in the Bridgeport area around 11:00 AM as a Category I hurricane. The first effects from Irene are expected to begin this evening with rain and tropical storm force winds moving into Connecticut between 10:00 PM and Midnight. Hurricane force winds are forecast to arrive along the coast at 7:00 AM Sunday morning. The rain is also expected to become heavy at times by midnight. Very heavy rain at times (especially in Western Connecticut) is expected to continue from midnight tonight through the passage of the center of Irene around 11:00 AM tomorrow morning and into the mid-afternoon.

River flooding from Irene is forecast to be moderate to major with the more severe flooding on smaller rivers and in urban areas. Major coastal flooding is possible with storm surges of 4 to 7 feet possible in Western Long Island Sound during high tide Sunday morning at 11:00 AM.

Irene is 26 hours from landfall and forecast confidence is high. Some small changes to the track forecast are still possible. The Department of Emergency Services and Public Protection will issue another update on Irene at 12 Noon.
